Letter from Hon. M. R. Smith.

MUKILETO, WASH., Aug. 3.—Editor of MARBLE HILL PRESS: July 20 I boarded the City of Everett, for Everette and Mukileto. At the docks in Everett I was met by Pinkney Barks and Henry Chandler, both Bollinger county residents, and they were smiling and glad to see me. You may be certain that I was delighted to meet someone whom I knew and had known for a good many years. Only one acquaintance I had seen since leaving St. Louis on the 21st, and that was Judge Olden, who formerly practiced law in West Plains.
 He is now a banker in Boise, Idaho.
 Pinkney Barks is the same plain man, old-fashioned and friendly, and always genial in his fellowship and companionable. I went with him and Henry Chandler to the Farmers' Store and Hotel and chatted with them for about half an hour and what I could tell my anxious and eager friends of news from home, I did them. That was a short half an hour we spent, and back to the docks we went, where, with Henry Chandler, I took a launch and sailed nearly five miles outward down the sound to Mukileto to see my brother, N. J. Smith, formerly of Glen Allen, and his family, arriving here a few minutes before 4 o'clock in the afternoon. There in their well-appointed and convenient home I found them glad to see me and the gladness reciprocated fourfold.

My sister-in-law, woman-like, wanted to know all about everybody and everything back in old Missouri. I set to the performance of my task and found that she acquainted myself with credit and to her entire satisfaction. She had kept up with the happenings in Bollinger county remarkably well, having noted the marriages and deaths with clever accuracy.
 But this is not to be wondered at, for she is a very sprightly and clever woman, as her many friends in Bollinger county testify. We recounted many happenings of twenty-five years ago and even further back, with pleasure and awakened many fond recollections. The age of her father and her anxiety to see him was the burden of her longing for a visit to Missouri, which will be made this summer, about the middle of August.
 Nor did she forget out of her memory to shed a tear over the newly made grave of her departed mother, whom she left in the early part of November, 1885.
 They have an interesting family, with a bright future. The three oldest have married, and married fortunately. I could say more, but possibly my readers would not regard me as an impartial critic, and the untold part of a story is often the most entertaining part, as in this case.
